PREFACE.

Massachusetts has ever been a leader in intelligent devotion to matters historical and genealogical, as shown by her insistence from earliest days on keeping of full local records, the painstaking labors of Record commissioners of recent years, the formation of so many county and town historical societies, the delivery and publication of anniversary sermons and addresses, the comprehensive histories prepared under the auspices of so many of even the smaller towns, the printing of genealogies of nearly all the old families, the movement of the last few years toward publication of local manuscript records,—and in many other ways.

The result of these various activities has been the production of an enormous and bewildering amount of material, desirable and in fact necessary to the investigator, but no where to be found collected, nor even listed with anything approaching completeness.

Enormous Amount of Material.

There is no wish to disparage such works as Ludewig's "Literature of American local history," 1846; Colburn's "Bibliography of the local history of Massachusetts," 1871; Perkins' "Check list for American local history," 1876; Griffin's "Index of articles upon American local history in historical collections," 1889, and supplement, 1896; "Poole's Index," or the various library catalogues which have bibliographic value. But the early date of most of these works and their special limitations make it doubtful if all combined give a clue to one-half the material here collected.

Starting with the purpose to list in the "Guide," all books, pamphlets, and articles in periodicals, society publications and other collected works, it later seemed best to broaden the plan so as to include three other classes not usually noted in bibliographies; namely: works in preparation, historical manuscripts, and the numerous series of articles which have appeared in local papers (most frequently in the form of publication of the official records of town or church, sketches of old buildings, biographies of early residents, etc.)

The value of such a work to the person interested in local history need not be enlarged upon.

The genealogist will find it equally useful, it is believed. As is well known, that indispensable handbook, Munsell's 'Index to American Genealogies,'* in indexing town histories, notes only three or more generations of a family, living in one locality, and whose records are printed in some consecutive form. How often it happens that the inquirer's starting point in tracing back his ancestry is a tradition or belief that a certain ancestor settled or lived in a given town. If the "Index," under the family name, refers to a history of that town, the matter is easy, provided the book can be obtained; but in case no such reference is found, does it mean that there is no genealogical history of that place, that the settler and his children moved away before the birth of the third generation, or that the tradition was erroneous? Only the most superficial of investigators would stop here, and even the fortunate one, who has been directed to a genealogical sketch, at least hopes to find more about his ancestors than the bare vital records. So there arises sooner or later the question as to what has been written on that particular locality; and thus it is that the "Guide," will serve as a companion volume to the "Index."

With the undertaking once inaugurated, a most important decision had to be made as to what would be understood by the term "local history." Clearly if the work was to be held within reasonable limits it was out of the question to make a complete bibliography of each locality, or even to cover as broad a field as such excellent compilations as Bolton's "Some works relating to Brookline," Hunnewell's "Bibliography of Charlestown," Green's "Bibliography of Groton," Nichols' "Bibliography of Worcester," etc. Such an undertaking would require ten volumes the size of this. It being necessary to restrict, the line has been drawn at

Biographical and Descriptive material.

* Originally called Durrie's Index.

Perhaps the plan will be more readily understood if it is stated broadly what classes are not included:

Natural history

Education

Religious history excepting always the history of the old original churches, which is so largely the town history in the early days.

History of institutions and societies

Industries

Town and city documents, reports, etc.

Directories

State legislative documents

Maps

Official manuscript records in hands of their legal custodians which are described in the Reports of the state Record commissioner

Addresses, sermons, etc. of "local flavor," but scarcely to be considered as contributions to history

Individual biography

Genealogy of single families

Furthermore, we deal only with the Massachusetts of today, though each one of the neighboring states contains territory once claimed and administered by Massachusetts.

The writer disclaims any purpose of defending the limitations set above: a decision was necessary and it was made, in some cases after a large amount of notes had been collected on material it was later decided to exclude. Nor can it be claimed that the above limitations have always been followed with consistency, especially where the works have been only reported and not seen.

Criticism on these points will be most welcome and given due weight in the publication of another edition, should one be called for. Blank pages are provided at the end for notes of additions, corrections and suggestions, and it is hoped they will be largely used.

Criticism Will Be Welcomed.

It will be noticed that the local list is prefaced by a section of general works. These are not only such as are likely to be of special value to the user of the "Guide," but in many cases are of the utmost importance for the local material they contain, which it was impracticable to analyze. Such are especially the works on the early history, Indian wars, etc.

In the actual preparation of the "Guide," the works in the Library of Congress were first indexed (including analysis of sets of periodicals, etc.) Then the well-known collection of the New England Historic Genealogical Society was carefully examined, as far as it relates to Massachusetts, and later the various bibliographies were searched for material not already found. Finally the assistance of the local librarian was sought, and to each one was sent a manuscript or proof list of works on that locality, with the double request for (1) assistance in perfecting it and (2) the addresses of any local historians likely to be willing to co-operate. The response in general was most satisfactory and the results invaluable. Not infrequently the librarian was an antiquarian of repute, and in many other instances historians have freely and gladly given their assistance.

On the other hand, in a few towns, it has been impossible to arouse the interest of the librarian or any other competent person. In those cases it is believed that little manuscript or other material of importance has been overlooked, because in nearly every instance the proof sheets have been examined by some competent authority on the section or county.

It was originally the purpose to include works to the end of 1905, but a few publications of 1906 have been added as they were brought to notice.

The arrangement by counties was adopted on account of the desirability of having contiguous or related localities brought near together; and also because much of the literature is so written that it easily and economically falls into this arrangement. The alphabetic index at the end will make consultation easy for all.

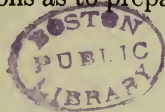

As to rules of entry used in the preparation, the convenience of the ordinary user has been borne in mind, avoiding both the fullness and detail of the so-called scholarly bibliography and the extreme brevity and resulting confusion of the mere check-list.

An attempt to express here the gratitude due to those who have helped would mean the enumeration of the librarians of nearly all of the 354 towns of the commonwealth, and from two to half a dozen other friends in many of them. To their assistance a large part of the work is due.

The following have given valuable aid in broader fields than any single town: Miss C. H. Abbott, Andover; W. F. Adams, Springfield; John Albree, Boston; Azel Ames, Wakefield; H. H. Ballard, Pittsfield; C. E. Banks, Cottage City; G. E. Bowman, Boston; J. E. Crane, Taunton; W. P. Cutter, Northampton; H. W. Denio, Westfield; G. F. Dow, Salem; W. P. Greenlaw, Boston; E. D. Harris, New York; James Hosmer, Hinsdale; R. K. Shaw, Worcester; George Sheldon, Deerfield; W. A. Slade, Washington; H. G. Wadlin, Boston. And especially am I indebted to my cousin, Mrs. Alice H. Stuart, for assistance in the early stages of the work:

Finally it is a pleasure to acknowledge the helpfulness and un-failing interest of Mr. A. W. Dennis, of the Salem Press Co., to whom is due not merely the excellent appearance of the volume, but valuable suggestions as to preparation and form.

The arrangement of the Guide is as follows: (1st) General works on the state, in various subdivisions; (2d) counties alphabetically, with towns alphabetically under each county; (3d) a local index giving present and obsolete names of localities in the state.

First after the name of the county, town or city is given in each instance a brief outline sketch, showing original designation of the territory, date of incorporation, changes in limits, etc.*

In using the "Guide" no one should be satisfied with consulting the entries under name of town sought. Read carefully the preliminary note just mentioned. All material relating to a parent town before division will be found under its name, even when relating to a definite part later set off; e. g., a work on New Bedford in the Revolution would appear under Dartmouth and not New Bedford. Sometimes, however, it is found desirable to enter in both places. Comprehensive histories of a locality, however, are not entered under the name of a parent town simply because the first chapter deals with the period before division.

After exhausting the list of works on the town and parent towns, the general works on the county should be scanned, and finally those on the state at large. The genealogist, especially, will do well to bear in mind the local geography, the frequent change in town lines, and the not uncommon practice of residents living near the line in one town, attending church and being buried in another. Such users will find the outline maps very convenient and suggestive.

Towns which have been annexed to neighboring cities are treated as if still independent: e. g., Bradford, Dorchester, etc.

Works by individual authors are entered under the author's name (under the first, if more than one author); others according to what is believed to be the practice of the best public libraries. From book titles, the author's name, Mass., name of county and day of week are regularly omitted; other omissions are marked by the . . . ; numerals are given in arabic figures. The main pagination only is given, prefatory and appendix material being usually disregarded. Size is not noted, save by the use of "folio" for large works. A single dash (—) means the repetition of last-named author (or last title if work is anonymous); two dashes (— —) signify repetition of both author and title.

In citations from periodicals, the date, and volume and page are regularly given. Under the plan followed, county histories and other general works covering several towns are entered first under the county name, and not analyzed under the component towns unless the town histories are by different persons. Periodicals and society publications pertaining to a single town are not regularly analyzed for works on that town, unless of special value or interest.

No special effort has been made to list all editions of a work where differences are unimportant. Italics are used for all manuscript and newspaper material, whether or not clipped and mounted in scrap-books—a fact, for all except books, pamphlets and articles in magazine or collections. Where necessary for clearness, the period covered by a work is supplied in the title, but such dates are to be considered approximate and not necessarily exact. This, or in fact any important information about a work, not set out in the regular title, is most often supplied in smaller type at the end of the entry. Another use of this smaller type has been to indicate the location of a work. Where no place is mentioned, it may be understood that it is to be found in the Library of Congress, or New England Historic Genealogical Society, or both. In the failure of either of these collections to possess the work, we have merely noted the first library or individual reporting it.

* These data are derived from the most part from the much fuller statistics in the 1905 Manual of the General Court, contributed by Record-Commissioner R. T. Swan, but certain changes have been made on what seemed the best authority.

GENERAL WORKS.

In the selection of the following from the great mass of material on Massachusetts, preference has been given to works of value to the genealogist and the student of local history. Most of these works have not been analyzed, yet extremely valuable local history is contained in them; especially in the early 17th century chronicles. In general, only the latest or best edition is cited, with brief mention of others.

ESSEX COUNTY.

One of the four counties into which the province of Mass. Bay was divided in 1643. It included Salem, Lynn, Enon [Wenham], Ipswich, Rowley, Newbury, Gloucester and Chocicawick [Andover].

In 1679-1680 on the setting off of the greater part of the original Norfolk Co. to N. H. the remainder (Salisbury, Amesbury and Haverhill) was annexed to Essex Co.

The only change in co. lines since that date has been the annexation of a part of Chelsea, Suffolk Co. to Saugus in 1841.

HAMPSHIRE COUNTY.

Organized, 1662, to include towns in the western part of the colony. The only incorporated towns at the time were Springfield, Northampton and Hadley, which had previously belonged to no co.

As originally constituted Hampshire Co. included the territory now covered by Hampshire, Berkshire, Franklin and Hampden Cos. with certain of the western parts of Worcester Co. 1731, Brookfield and the South town laid out for Narragansett soldiers [Westminster] were set off to new co. of Worcester. In 1761, the western part was incorporated as Berkshire Co. The next change came in 1811 at which time Hampshire contained 63 towns; in that year 24 towns were detached to form Franklin Co. and 1812, 18 more to form Hampden Co.

PLYMOUTH COUNTY.

One of the 3 counties into which the Plymouth Colony was divided in 1685. It then consisted of the towns of Plymouth, Duxbury, Scituate, Marshfield, Bridgewater and Middleborough.

The following changes in county lines have occurred: 1707 Rochester (which had been incorporated, 1686, as a part of Barnstable Co.) was annexed; 1798, part of Stoughton, Norfolk Co. was annexed to Bridgewater, North parish; 1803, Hingham and Hull (which had been set off from Suffolk to Norfolk Co. in 1793, but restored to the former on their protest) were added to Plymouth Co.; 1823, part of Scituate set off to Cohasset, Norfolk Co.

County seat: Plymouth.

BRIDGEWATER.

Part of Duxbury called the New Plantation; town 1656.

Annexed: lands to west, called Hockomock, 1662; Foord's Farms and lands adjoining, 1691; parts of Stoughton, 1770, 1798; part of E. Bridgewater, 1846.

Set off: Foord's Farms to Abington, 1712; 4th or North parish as North Bridgewater [Brockton] 1821; 1st or West parish as West Bridgewater, 1822; 3d or East parish as East Bridgewater, 1823; parts added to Halifax, 1824; to East Bridgewater, 1846.

Though the present town of Bridgewater is not the original parish, all works on old Bridgewater are placed here. The first division into parishes came in 1716, the old parish being known as the North, the 2d or new as the South parish or precinct. 1723 the third or East parish was formed from the 1st (thenceforth known as West) and a small portion of the South. 1738 the 4th or North parish was incorporated from the 1st and 3d. Titicut parish was formed in 1743 from the South parish and the north part of Middleborough.

SUFFOLK COUNTY.

One of the 4 counties into which the Mass. Bay Colony was divided in 1643. It consisted originally of Boston, Roxbury, Dorchester, Dedham, Braintree, Weymouth, Hingham, and Nantasket [Hull]. 1671 Mendon was transferred from Middlesex. In 1793 all the towns then constituting Suffolk Co. with the exception of Boston and Chelsea, were set off to the new county of Norfolk. In the same year, however, Hingham and Hull protested against this act and were allowed to remain in Suffolk Co. till finally joined to Plymouth Co. in 1803.

County seat: Boston.

of W. Roxbury (Mt. Hope Cemetery), 1872; Charlestown, Brighton and W. Roxbury, 1874.

Set off: Mount Woolaston, as Braintree, 1640; Muddy River, as Brookline, 1705; Winnissimet, Rumney Marsh and Pullen Point (excepting Noddle's Island and Hog Island), as Chelsea, 1739; part to Newton, 1875.

In view of the enormous mass of material in print on Boston, it has seemed best, almost necessary in fact, to restrict the following list more narrowly than has been attempted elsewhere in the Guide. Otherwise its very extent would interfere with its usefulness, unless it were classified; and that is considered undesirable.

Accordingly while works of purely historical and genealogical character have been uniformly included, it has been decided to omit descriptive material, guide books, books of views, the literature of literary and artistic Boston, sociological studies and institutional history (apart from the history of the 17th century churches.)

WORKMAN, F. B. The city of Worcester—the heart of the commonwealth. (Bay State monthly. Aug. 1885. v. 3, p. 147-164.)

INDEX OF LOCAL NAMES.

HERE are entered all counties and towns of the commonwealth, with county and page number.

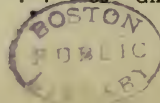

References are made from obsolete or popular terms, including earlier official names and well known or early Indian designations (in the last case only one or two of the most familiar being chosen from the numerous modes of spelling). There are also references from names of villages in the towns, in so far as they are the subject of specific works.

Mere villages whose names begin with East, North, South or West, however, do not appear (e. g., East Brookfield; while West Brookfield is given, being an incorporated town); nor such terms as Gloucester Fifth parish. In such cases look under the important word, as Brookfield, Gloucester.

MEMORANDUM.

These blank pages are inserted here as an invitation to every user of the Guide to make entry of any suggestions or criticisms for the improvement of a future edition of the Guide, or to mention any omissions he may discover that seem to come properly within the scope of the work, as outlined in the preface. Such notes will be of the greatest value in themselves, and if the work is ever revised, their contribution will be the most effective kind of cooperation.
